RESPONSE OPPOSING DEFENDANT'S MOTION
FOR EMERGENCY FURLOUGH

AND NOW, comes the government through Christy H. Fawcett, Assistant U.S. Attorney, and files the within Response Opposing Defendant's Motion for Emergency Furlough:

The government opposes the defendant's motion for the following reasons:

1. The government believes the Court has no jurisdiction to rule on the defendant's petition because the defendant is now in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons.

2. The government's understanding is that these matters are usually handled by the prison counselor and the warden at the prison where the defendant is incarcerated. The defendant makes no representation concerning what efforts have been made to handle this matter in an appropriate fashion at the prison. Thus, the government is concerned that the defendant's request has been denied by the prison and the defendant is attempting to circumvent normal channels.

3. The defendant is a security risk. He has numerous prior felony convictions. He is serving a lengthy term of incarceration. At the time of his arrest on the offense for which he is now incarcerated, he led law enforcement agents on a high speed chase which posed a grave risk to officers and civilians. He was apprehended only after he lost control of his car and overturned the car.

Respectfully submitted,

MARTIN C. CARLSON
Acting United States Attorney
